Hurricane Matthew has not finished with the US yet

(8 October 2016, <http://www.bbc.co.uk>)

On Friday morning, President Barack Obama addressed fears that the storm's winds could fuel a wave of seawater that might wash over coastal communities along a 500-mile stretch from South Florida to Charleston, South Carolina.

- 5 Some two million people have been advised to evacuate across coastal areas of Florida, Georgia and South Carolina.
Walt Disney World, Universal Studios and SeaWorld - the famed theme parks in Orlando, Florida - are all closed.
Fort Lauderdale and Orlando airports have shut, and airlines have cancelled
10 more than 4,500 flights.
Amtrak suspended train services between Miami and New York.
About 22,000 people were moved to shelters, Florida Governor Rick Scott said at a news conference on Friday morning.
Thousands of people have hunkered down in schools converted to shelters.
15 Patients have been transferred to safer locations from two waterfront hospitals and a nursing home near Daytona Beach, Florida.
After Florida, Matthew is hugging the coast of Georgia and is then expected to move near or over South Carolina's coast before spinning out to sea, forecasters say.
20 In many areas earlier in the week, cars queued for fuel and residents stocked up on food and hardware supplies to board up their houses, local reports said.
In South Carolina, lanes on some highways were reversed so vehicles could head west away from the storm.
